Downloading short, high-impact videos such as this one, and putting copies on phones, tablet computers, big-screen TVs, etc. to show to friends, family, colleagues, etc. is a powerful way to bypass mass media censorship.

If you encourage others to do the same, this approach can have a viral-type wide reach that works well in conjunction with viral e-mails.

Showing short videos in person allows key messages to reach those who watch a lot of TV but seldom use social media or e-mail. Reaching TV addicts is especially important for this specific message. The video makes it very clear why people shouldn't believe what they see on TV.

The best approach to take when showing videos in person is to ask "What do you think of this?" A lot of people don't like it when you lecture them. They're more receptive when you ask their opinion.

A variant on the theme is to show videos like this on big screen TVs attached to the sides of vehicles parked outside main exits of school board meetings, other political meetings, shareholders' meetings, sports events, churches, and other venues where crowds are exiting. In this case, it's useful to provide a short link at the bottom-right of the video to a website where the video can be downloaded. This supports the viral aspect of effective messaging techniques.

Knocking on voters' doors and showing them videos of the appalling things going on in classrooms and school boards has proven to be very productive in ousting far-left extremist lunatics from school boards and replacing them with sane people.

Conservatives have far more children than Liberals. Liberals make up for this by hijacking school boards so they can groom conservative parents' kids, turning them against their own parents, brainwashing them into joining the ranks of far-left extremism.

This neo-Bolshevik tactic has political parallels with parasitic cuckoo birds' approach to taking over nests, as shown in this video.

Instead of literally killing the host's offspring as the cuckoo bird does, far-left extremist school boards invade the minds of conservative parents' offspring, turning them into neo-Bolsheviks.

The cuckoo bird analogy also parallels conservative cuckoo birds who support replacement migration by violent, hostile tribes that swarm and attack the cuckoo birds' own children

School board elections are being turned into GOP proving grounds, as explained here:

RINO nominees at all levels of politics can be weeded out by asking them to show proof of what they've done during the ongoing school board wars. Proven action and results are more impressive than platitudes and empty promises.
